

RICHARD CARPENTER (1729-1788)
PIONEER MERCHANT OF BRITISH WEST FLORIDA AND THE NATCHEZ DISTRICT OF SPANISH WEST FLORIDA

By TERRY L. CARPENTER*

Richard Carpenter, born on 3 July 1729, at Newport, Rhode Island, was descended from a New England family founded by William Carpenter who arrived in Massachusetts on the ship Bevis from Southampton, England, in 1638.¹ William Carpenter had been born in Wiltshire, England, in 1605 and died in 1659 at Rehoboth, Massachusetts. His descendants settled throughout New England in colonial days and were active in expanding the frontiers of the American continent.

In 1765 Richard Carpenter journeyed to West Florida, England's fifteenth and newest American colony. He was thirty-six years of age and married, the father of five children.² A merchant by trade, he intended to settle in the young colony and, on 24 December 1765, was granted town lot number 253 in Pensacola, the seat of government.³

West Florida had been organized in 1763 from territories surrendered to England after the Seven Years' War.⁴ The area included within its boundaries had previously been under Spanish and French dominion. In February of 1764 the colony was expanded to include the Natchez District, first settled by the French in 1716, and other valuable lands. The final boundaries were the Gulf of Mexico to the south, the Mississippi River, Bayou Manchac (called the Iberville River by the British), and lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain to the west, a line corresponding to latitude 32° 28' to the north, and the Apalachicola and Chattahoochee Rivers to the east.

The settlers of the colony under the British came primarily from the older colonies of New England, joined by lesser numbers of Britons, Spaniards, French, and Germans. The conditions in the colony ranged from very civilized in the older settlements to primitive in the interior, and immigrants of nearly every skill and trade were needed.⁵ Richard was accompanied to the colony in 1765 by his brother Caleb Carpenter; they were later joined by their younger brother Joseph Carpenter.⁶ The three were associated in a mercantile firm.

Richard had been a merchant in his native colony before coming to West Florida.⁷ Merchants were important to the new colony: they traded with the Indian tribes of the region and the hunters and trappers who traveled the interior wilderness, as well as with the new settlers entering the colony who required supplies when establishing themselves. Many of the merchants were agents for firms in the coastal trade centers of Pensacola and Mobile, and in New England and Britain. Upon their arrival Richard and Caleb Carpenter had established a "commercial branch" at Pensacola.⁸ About 1771 they moved their operations to the settlement of Manchac in the Mississippi River district of the colony and later were, according to one source, "the first Americans who formed a mercantile establishment in Natchez."⁹ Their brother Joseph had joined them in the district by 1780.¹⁰

For a number of years Richard was associated with Captain John Holly, who was active in the transport of goods from the Mississippi district to eastern markets. As administrator of the Captain's estate, Richard wrote that he had known Holly "a long time. First when he left Long Island, Master of a vessel, and afterwards the whole time that he travelled on this river."¹¹ Richard described in some detail Holly's connections with Jamaica between 1773 and 1776 when Holly settled at Baton Rouge and became a planter. In 1773 John Fitzpatrick, a prominent West Florida merchant with whom Richard had numerous contacts, wrote of his meeting with "Capt. Carpenter" on "the evening before his Vessell was to sail for the Cape."¹² The Cape, Cap Francois on Saint Domingue, was an important port of exchange for imported French goods and exported colonial products. Richard was later associated with "John Brown, of Rhode Island, merchant," as his partner in Natchez.¹³ Rhode Island ports were major places of call for ships involved in the West Indian trade.

On 12 January 1769 Richard voted at Pensacola in the election of representatives to the colonial General Assembly, and on 17 May 1769 was elected to the Assembly as a representative from Mobile.¹⁴ Election to a position of public service signified that he was a man who was well-known, capable, and trusted by his peers in the colony.

Richard and his brother Caleb had applied on 16 August 1768 for a grant of 2,000 acres "on the River Mississippi, where vacant," expressing a desire to improve the land as their reason for requesting the grant.¹⁵ They were allowed only 1,000 acres in the "Mississippi" district, on condition that they take out the grant within seven months; the patent was recorded on 4 July 1769.¹⁶

On 24 February 1769 Richard again petitioned for a grant of 1,000 acres "on the River Mobile" with the explanation that he had applied in June 1768 for 2,000 acres of land for himself and his brother, Caleb Carpenter; granted only 1,000—he supposes because he did not explain that he intended to bring a number of families to settle on the grant. He now explains that a third brother, Joseph, together with himself and Caleb, intend with their families to become settlers in the Province and that he himself intends on his next return to bring a number of settlers from New England provided he can obtain a larger grant, which they intended to clear and plant.¹⁷ This grant was also approved, again on condition that he take it out within seven months; the patent was recorded on 22 July 1769.¹⁸

The Mississippi district included the British settlements of Ozarks (also called Concord), Walnut Hills (now Vicksburg), Petit Gulf, Grand Gulf, Natchez, Baton Rouge, and Manchac, along the eastern banks of the Mississippi. By 1770 there were fewer than one hundred claims in the region, but by 1773 claims had more than doubled. During the American Revolution the colony was declared an asylum for Loyalists and, as they and others migrated from the war-torn eastern colonies, the number of grants greatly increased.¹⁹ Generous land grants and other inducements were offered to encourage the growth of the colony.

and Dr. Samuel Flowers near Baton Rouge.³¹ When the British troops under Lt. Colonel Alexander Dickson surrendered Baton Rouge on the afternoon of the 20th, arrangements were made to also surrender Fort Panmure at Natchez.

Thus began a new era for the Mississippi district under Spanish rule, and later as part of Spanish West Florida, which was ceded to Spain on 10 May 1781. Except for a rebellion by a number of Natchez District residents in 1781, which the Spanish quickly quelled, Spain was to rule until the peaceful transfer of Natchez to American control in 1798, provided for in the Treaty of San Lorenzo on 27 October 1795.

Many of the Manchac residents who had left the settlement when Willing raided it had returned to still-troubled West Florida by late 1778 or early 1779.³² It is not known to what extent the raid may have affected Richard Carpenter, but he undoubtedly suffered at least some losses. He had returned to Manchac by May 1779.³³ Some of the residents were compelled to stay in the colony after its transfer to Spanish control in hopes of recovering some of the losses which they had sustained in the struggles among the three powers in the region. John Fitzpatrick had tried since Willing's raid to gain recompense for his losses in that conflict, but had limited success. He had furnished the British forces with all the supplies and services available to him and suffered considerable losses as a loyal British subject. But by 1785 he concluded that "I have no longer any reason to expect; that . . . the British Court will ever pay a farthing of my account against it (so much for being a Subjit)."³⁴ Many of the residents had suffered similarly and Fitzpatrick's bitterness toward the previous rulers was undoubtedly shared by other former British "Subjits" in the region.

After the Spanish took control, the British residents who chose to remain were allowed to become Spanish subjects by taking an oath of loyalty to the Spanish king and agreeing to support the colonial government; many did so, as did Richard Carpenter.³⁵ The Spanish governors were very progressive in their policies. They demonstrated their stated beneficence toward the colonists by offering them generous land grants and allowing much personal freedom. Though the official religion of Spain was Roman Catholicism, freedom of worship was extended to Protestant and Jewish citizens of Spanish West Florida.

The Mississippi district in particular prospered greatly under the Spanish governors. In a letter dated 23 May 1785, at Manchac, John Fitzpatrick noted that the "English that still remain in the country, are treated with great indulgence and sivilility by the government, and as things now stand with us; if we only had a free head in to the river; I do not know where we could go to better ourselves."³⁶ Conditions in the colony would remain excellent throughout the Spanish era.

Sometime between 1776 and 1779 Richard suffered the loss of his wife Ruth.³⁷ The records have not shed any light on the circumstances of her death. Ruth Collins had married Richard on 2 December 1750 at Newport, Rhode Island.³⁸

In 1771 Richard had been elected to represent Pensacola in the Assembly, but he sent word that he would not be able to attend the session.²⁰ His absence may have been caused in part by his move that year to the settlement of Manchac, away from the seat of government.²¹ Manchac was located in the southwestern corner of the colony, just across the Mississippi River and Bayou Manchac from Spanish Louisiana. The Spanish fort San Gabriel de Manchack was "not a bow shot" away across the bayou, and was even linked to the British settlement by a wooden bridge across the bayou, which was often dry when the Mississippi River was low.²² The settlement was yet too small to be represented in the Assembly.

In 1773 a merchant who had passed through Manchac described it as having "several tollerable houses & very good gardens, but no soldiers."²³ Richard was granted a town lot in 1772, where he probably located his business.²⁴ Manchac was an important and busy center of trade, much of it contraband, between the Mississippi River, controlled at New Orleans by the Spanish, and Pensacola and Mobile on the coast of the colony.

Richard lived on his plantation a few miles north of the town with his family, near the plantations of several other recent settlers.²⁵ The settlements of Manchac and Natchez had grown sufficiently populous by 1778 for their residents to be represented at the Assembly meeting held in that year, which indicated the magnitude of the trade in and the influx of settlers to the Mississippi district.²⁶ A map of Manchac and its surroundings made in 1778 showed the plantation of Richard Carpenter, north of the town of Manchac, on the eastern bank of the Mississippi River.²⁷

In February 1778 the British settlements along the Mississippi were raided by a force of over 100 men under the command of James Willing, who had been authorized by the Continental Congress to obtain supplies for the Western posts of the American army.²⁸ The settlements were easily overwhelmed, in part because their military garrisons had been abandoned in 1768. (The abandonment had been opposed by the settlers with the backing of a group of merchants in Liverpool, England, who had business interests in the Mississippi district, but to no avail.²⁹) Willing's forces reached Manchac on the morning of 23 February and quickly captured and sacked the settlement. After the raid one former resident observed that the Americans had "cleared all the English side of the river of its inhabitants, and nothing [is] to be seen but destruction and desolation."³⁰ Many of the civilians had fled into Spanish Louisiana, some taking refuge in the nearby fort San Gabriel de Manchack where the Spanish authorities sheltered them. On 14 March British troops sent from Pensacola retaliated against the small American garrison left at Manchac and recaptured it, only to retreat soon after.

British reinforcements were deployed to defend the valuable Mississippi district in late 1778 and early 1779. Spain joined France in the war against already hard-pressed Great Britain on 21 June 1779, and in September ordered General Bernardo de Galvez, governor of Spanish Louisiana, to drive the British from the Mississippi district. Galvez proceeded to capture Manchac on 7 September, and then on the morning of the 20th attacked the British defenses which had been hastily erected on the plantation of Stephen Watts

About 1779 Richard Carpenter Esq. married Mrs. Mary (Fairchild) Lewis, widow of Daniel Lewis junior.⁴¹ Mary was a native of Sheffield, Massachusetts, where she had married Lewis in 1771 before accompanying him to Manchac in 1774. They had moved to Plaquemines Parish, Louisiana, after Willing's raid, and Daniel Lewis jr. had died there about 1778. After their marriage Richard and Mary settled near Baton Rouge.⁴²

In the early 1780s Richard took the oath of loyalty at Baton Rouge and became a Spanish subject.⁴⁴ By 1785 he had relocated to Natchez Landing (Natchez-Under-The-Hill) where on 18 January 1785, Louis Chacheret, a merchant "of the District," sold to Richard Carpenter, merchant, "of same," a house and lot in the town.⁴⁵ About the same time Richard purchased 250 arpents of land on St. Catherine's Creek near Natchez.⁴⁶

He apparently planned to locate permanently in the Natchez District and on 3 June 1787 sold his property in Baton Rouge, consisting of "9 or 10 arpents . . . with buildings," to Samuel Steere of that District.⁴⁷ The original sale deed, written in Spanish, indicated that the land had been acquired by Richard in Pensacola from Lieutenant Governor and Acting Governor of British West Florida Montfort Browne, who served in that capacity from early May to early August 1768.⁴⁸ The date of acquisition indicates that the land was part of Richard's original 1,000-acre grant in the Mississippi district, which was obtained in August 1768.

The land in the Natchez District had been glowingly described by Richard's brother Caleb in 1776: "Within this district, which takes in a very large tract of country, are the most fertile, beautiful, healthy, and variegated lands in this province, or perhaps in the whole continent of America. Watered by [an] abundance of springs and rivulets, without swamps, and everywhere interspersed with spacious clearings, once old Indian fields, or French plantations, [it is] fit for immediate cultivation."⁴⁹ The Natchez District was of paramount importance to the colony, and later to the territory and then State of Mississippi. It was the earliest center of wealth and culture created by the agrarian economy of the region and retained that position for well over a century. Richard was apparently satisfied with the District, and it is certain that he fared well there. He was a moderately prominent figure, counting many influential persons among his friends and business contacts.⁵⁰

On 1 March 1788 Richard purchased a plantation of 294 arpents on St. Catherine's Creek.⁵¹ In addition to that land, on 30 June 1788 he took out a grant from the Spanish government of 800 arpents of land also "on the water's of St. Catherine's Creek," about eight miles from Fort Panmure de Natchez.⁵² On the latter plantation he planned to build a residence, as many other wealthy Natchezians of his day would do, in order to move out of the somewhat unsettled atmosphere of the Landing.

However, Richard became ill in the summer of 1788, and on 14 July, being "weak in body," felt it prudent to pen his will.⁵³ On 24 July 1788 notice was sent to District Commandant Don Carlos de Grand-Pré of "the death of Richard Carpenter at the plantation of Samuel Flowers to which he had been removed on night of July 22."⁵⁴

As was the custom of the day, the Post Commandant, with two witnesses, Antonio Solere and Don Estevan Minor, "repaired to the dwelling house of the deceased in the town of Natchez and caused the most important keys to be delivered to the Commandant, five in number, (1) key to a writing desk, (2) key to a trunk, (3) key to the store, (4) key to another trunk, (5) key to the cellar; seal of Commandant's arms affixed to said places and things for security, leaving said property in charge of Bernard Lintot, of this District."⁵⁵ This was done in order to make certain of proper accounting of the value of the estate.

In his will Richard had provided for his "beloved wife Mary" and his "son James and three daughters Elizabeth, Mary, and Sarah."⁵⁶ He arranged to have $500 to be used for construction of a house for his "wife and family, as soon as it can be conveniently done" on the 800-arpent plantation which he had recently been granted. He also specified the disposal of the remainder of his extensive estate, including "a house . . . with kitchen, store, and lots belonging," trade goods and accounts from his store, slaves, household items, and livestock.⁵⁷

Richard's son-in-law Dr. Samuel Flowers was appointed ad interim curator and guardian of the minor heirs, James and Sarah Carpenter. Executors were Richard's widow Mary, daughter Mary and son-in-law Samuel Flowers, son-in-law Charles Boardman, with his "friends Mr. David Williams and Bernard Lintot."⁵⁸ The list of 404 debts outstanding to the estate included an excellent cross-sectional sample of Spanish and Anglo-American society in the Natchez District.⁵⁹

Richard Carpenter was a remarkable individual. He chose to leave the settled New England colony of Rhode Island for a frontier region, where he endured the hardships of pioneer life during a period of great turmoil and danger, and he not only survived but thrived. His story is typical of that of many of the merchants operating on the frontiers of the American continent in his day, and illustrates the pioneer spirit of the times.

2. Elizabeth Carpenter, eldest daughter of Richard and Ruth (Collins) Carpenter, married Charles Boardman on 2 October 1783 in a ceremony performed by William Dunbar.⁶⁰ In a letter dated 18 October 1783, at Manchac, John Fitzpatrick noted that "Charles Bordeman is married to Mrs.

Thomas Beale's (American) "Company of Orleans Riflemen."⁷⁸ He was later released in an exchange of prisoners. Samuel's and Mary's descendants settled in the Natchez District and in Louisiana.

In 1792, the Spanish census of the Natchez District listed "la Vuida Carpenter" (the widow Carpenter) living in the Santa Catalina district of Natchez. Richard's widow, Mary (Fairchild) (Lewis) Carpenter, married General George Mathews in the summer of 1804.⁷⁹ Their marriage, the third for each, was performed by Judge Thomas Rodney in the village of Washington, Territory of Mississippi.

Mathews, born in Augusta County, Virginia, in 1739, was a veteran of the Revolutionary War, with a distinguished record. He was twice elected governor of Georgia and had come to Natchez in 1795 as the southwestern agent for the New England Mississippi Company which was involved in the controversial Yazoo land grants.⁸⁰

On Sunday, 31 March 1805, Judge Thomas Rodney and several other dignitaries dined with General and Mrs. Mathews at their home, after which Rodney noted that Mary was "an amiable woman. . . ."⁸¹ George Mathews died on 30 August 1812 in Augusta, Georgia, survived by his wife Mary and several children.⁸²

Bernard Lintot and David Williams had been appointed guardians and administrators of property for Richard's and Mary's two children, James and Sarah, by 16 August 1788, and apparently were to remain as such until the children reached maturity.⁸³ Sarah Carpenter apparently married a man of the surname Nelson before 1806, but nothing further is known of her.⁸⁴

7. James Carpenter, son of Richard and Mary (Fairchild) Carpenter, was born 30 November 1780. On 4 February 1804 James Carpenter "of Adams County, Mississippi Territory . . . heir at law of Richard, Caleb, and Joseph Carpenter," filed a petition with the Board of Commissioners appointed by the United States to receive and adjust claims to land in the former British and Spanish colony of West Florida.⁸⁵ The petition was intended to prove James' ownership of a 1,000-acre tract of land "lying east of the Alabama River . . . forty-five miles north of Mobile town . . . under and by virtue of a British patent granted to Richard, Caleb, and Joseph Carpenter" on 22 July 1769.⁸⁶ In support of his claim James submitted the original patent document, a copy of the plot of the land, and a deposition by Stephen Watts of New Orleans, who had known Richard Carpenter when a resident of Baton Rouge and the Natchez District. The board initially postponed a decision on the claim, but on 8 July 1805, after submission of additional evidence, the claim was confirmed.⁸⁷

On 4 March 1804 James filed a petition in court at Natchez to prove his legal right to possession of the plantation on St. Catherine's Creek left to him by his father in his will.⁸⁸ His representative, half-brother William M. Lewis, was issued a certificate of ownership for the plantation on 14 June 1805.⁸⁹

On 20 September 1804 James married Ann Somerville Marbury in the Baton Rouge District of Louisiana.⁹⁰ They settled on a plantation there and raised a family. James served in Captain Jedediah Smith's "Feliciano Troop of Horse,"

Battsey Carpenter . . . its said he has got a good Bargen. . . ."⁶¹ They first settled at Manchac and were in the Parish of Iberville in Spanish Louisiana in 1788.⁶² They later moved to Natchez, where in the 1792 Spanish census the name "Carlos Boardman" was returned from the Santa Catalina (St. Catherine's Creek) district.⁶³ Charles and Elizabeth had six children, of whom Charles junior, Francis, and Maryanne (who married William B. Jackson in 1808) are known.⁶⁴

Charles Boardman senior died before December 1800 and Elizabeth married William Darby on 8 September 1801.⁶⁵ William Darby was a frontier geographer, writer, and a man of many talents.⁶⁶ A son of Patrick and Mary (Rice) Darby, he was born in Derry, Pennsylvania, on 14 August 1775. He had come to Natchez in 1799 from the Ohio Country near Red Stone. Of his marriage Darby wrote: "I went to Natchez, where, very contrary to my expectations, I married . . . a widow with a family of children and quite handsome property. What led me into this connexion was a similarity of tastes. Like myself, Mrs. Boardman had been her own teacher, and had acquired a fine stock of information."⁶⁷ Darby called his new wife "Eliza."

Soon after their marriage they were beset by difficulties with the Boardman family, which, with some unfortunate losses at their plantation, so reduced their circumstances in Natchez that they were forced to liquidate most of their holdings there.⁶⁸ In one of their transactions, on 1 September 1804, "William Darby and Eliza, his wife late widow of Charles Boardman, deceased, formerly called Eliza Carpenter, daughter of Richard Carpenter, deceased, both of the city of Natchez in the Mississippi Territory" sold "all that undivided full 1/5 part of land and real estate of Richard Carpenter deceased, the father of the said Eliza, died having in Washington County, in the Territory of Mississippi."⁶⁹

In 1805 William and Elizabeth left Natchez for Opelousas, Louisiana, where Darby became a surveyor and rose to the office of deputy surveyor for the Western District of Orleans.⁷⁰ A daughter, Frances, was born to them in 1805.⁷¹ She was their only child. Elizabeth (Carpenter) (Boardman) Darby died on 23 October 1814, in Opelousas.⁷² Darby later recalled of his Eliza that, "As a wife she was everything that I or any man could wish for. . . ."⁷³ Their daughter died at a young age in 1821 at New Orleans, and Darby returned to the east, remarried, and continued his long and noteworthy career.⁷⁴

3. Mary Carpenter, second daughter of Richard and Ruth (Collins) Carpenter, married Doctor Samuel Flowers, a physician, in 1777.⁷⁵ They settled on a plantation near Manchac after their marriage, lived in a house in the town in 1780, but later moved to a plantation on St. Catherine's Creek in the Natchez District, probably about the time that her father settled there; Samuel Flowers was listed in the Spanish census of 1792 as a resident of the Santa Catalina district of Natchez.⁷⁶

A son of Samuel's had died when young in 1780 at Manchac.⁷⁷ Another son, William Flowers, was wounded and captured in the 22 December 1814 British attack on New Orleans during the War of 1812; he was a member of Captain

Hinds' Battalion of Cavalry, Mississippi Militia, during the War of 1812.⁹¹ During the siege of New Orleans in December 1814 he was at the residence of his half-nephew William Flowers in the Faubourg St. Mary (American Quarter) of New Orleans, where he and his half-nephews Charles and Francis Boardman, their brother-in-law Charles Dewees, George Mathews junior (who had married a daughter of Samuel and Mary Flowers), and William Darby had "gathered to aid in the defense of Louisiana" against the British.⁹² In 1847 James was living near his son William M. Carpenter; he died at St. Francisville, Louisiana, in November 1853.⁹³

Gina Carpenter

Gina Carpenter has a reason for being a stay-at-home mom: "I don't want to miss anything," she said. She and her husband, Tim, have been married for 22 years, and they have a 12-year-old daughter named Gabby and a 10-year-old son named

Gideon. Carpenter said her free time is largely devoted to being a "soccer mom," but she does try to find time to exercise and walk. She is on the board of the American Cancer Society and volunteers for the Special Olympics.
